

Temilade Salami

Founder of “EcoChampions”, member of the UNESCO SDG4Youth network and Youth Representative

Temilade Salami is a climate education and communications professional.

She is the founder and Executive Director of “EcoChampions”, one of Africa’s largest networks of young environmentalists and activists, leading environmental change through climate education, leadership and advocacy. She has spent the past five years leading a group of over 200 young environmentalists across Africa.

In this capacity, she has designed and developed various Climate change programs and projects across 26 African countries. Her work supports the integration of Climate Education into Africa’s education system, and she has authored two environmental books to bridge the climate education gap in Africa.

She holds a master's degree in Environment, Development and Policy from the University of Sussex. She also launched the Climate Education Leaders Fellowship in Africa, a program combining knowledge, expertise, and mentorship to prepare and educate the current and next generation of climate leaders.

She has spoken and featured multiple times on local and international platforms such as the UN, BBC, TVC, and SKY news. She is a member of the UNESCO SDG4Youth network, and the climate education coalition.
